PROFESSOR PETER P. HILL first introduced me to Gouverneur Morris in his marvelous lectures on diplomatic history at George Washington University; it is because of his energetic interest and unflagging encouragement that this work exists and that I have so much enjoyed the effort. Thanks are also due to Professor Richard Stott, who has been so helpful; to Professor Emmet Kennedy, not only for his advice but also for his excellent courses on the French Revolution, which made the notion of examining Morris's stay in Paris all the more intriguing; and to Dr. Dorothy Twohig, whose kind counsel has been a great help in this undertaking. Thanks, too, to my friend Captain Susan M. H. Gillett (who used her UPS stopovers to trudge about Paris on my behalf), and friends Kurt Edwards and Melissa Oppenheimer, who visited Paris museums for me. My dear sisters Anne Cosby Miller and Leslie M. Browne, and my dear aunt and uncle Mae C. Jayne and Professor Sears R. Jayne have my gratitude for their affectionate encouragement throughout. Finally, I want to thank my husband, David M. Archung, for his support from start to finish of this long project.
